SMC Opens New Facility

"It is a great pleasure to me to share in the dedication of this marvelous building here at Southern Missionary College," stated Dr. Robbie Blakemore, keynote speaker at the recent opening ceremonies of SMC's new home economics center. A crowd of some 200 students, college officials, faculty, and SMC Board of Trustees members were on hand for the program.

On introducing Dr. Blakemore, Dr. Knittel, president of the college, noted that she had received her Ph.D. from Florida State University and is currently serving as chairman of the department of crafts and interior design at the College of Home Economics at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville.

Later in her speech, Dr. Blakemore emphasized that the main impetus of home economics is to improve the development of living conditions on a worldwide scale. The goal is to improve the general quality of living all over the world, developing physiological health, improving food quality and nutrition in general.

Hunger and malnutrition, she stated, is a world problem affecting some 5 million children. Because of it, they are susceptible to sickness, disease, mental retardation and brain damage. To help remedy this situation, a product has been developed which includes corn meal, soy flour, and nonfat dry milk. "Given a small amount of this each day, one half of a child's daily protein requirement would be filled," she said.

Improvement in other fields is being explored by home economists. Some of these are interrelationships between nutrition and drug use; improvement of relations between individuals within families; improvement of relationships between parents and children; and development of appreciation of the aesthetic especially among the underprivileged.

Also, during the program, Charles Fleming Jr., general manager of the college, introduced the architect of the building, Jack Tyler, and his wife, Linda, "Much of the beauty of this campus is attributable to Jack," said Fleming.

Construction of the building was done under the direction of Francis Costerisan who was lauded for having completed the structure for $66,000 less than the budget called for.

"Although this building is economically built," stated Fleming, "nothing was sacrificed either in construction or aesthetics."

"For this addition to the campus, we thank the Board of Trustees, the Committee of 100, friends in Chattanooga, the constituency of the college and all of those who had a part in helping the campus to grow," Fleming said.

Other guests participating in the ceremony were J. Henson Whitehead, treasurer of the Southern Union Conference and H. H. Schmidt, president of the Southern Union Conference and chairman of SMC's Board of Trustees.

Board Votes Plans

The Board of Trustees of Southern Missionary College voted in its recent meeting to authorize architects to draw up preliminary plans for a fine arts center, according to Dr. Frank Knittel, SMC's president. The proposed center would complete the 10-year, $5 million expansion program of the campus.

In other actions, a new academic curriculum was voted in the graphic arts area, leading to an associate degree and a three-year certificate. The student would study all aspects of copy preparation, photography, layout and press work. The program will be a pilot study for one year, and Dr. C. F. W. Futcher, SMC's academic dean, will report to the board on its progress at the close of the coming school year.

Mrs. Blanche Jones, former dean of women at several Seventh-day Adventist Colleges, was employed as dean of women for the Orlando campus where students of nursing receive clinical experience in the four-year baccalaureate program.

Dr. Melvin Campbell was commended by the board for his leadership in SMC's Self-Study report and the preparation for the recent visit by an evaluation team of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. The team's evaluation and the status of SMC's re-accreditation will be announced next fall by the Southern Association.

A committee composed of board members and college administrators, will study the possibilities for a name for the new home economics center that was officially opened while the board members were on campus. The members of the committee are as follows: Dr. Ben Wygal, president of Florida Junior College, Jacksonville; Elder H. F. Roll, secretary of the Southern Union Conference, Atlanta; Elder W. S. Banfield, associate secretary of the Southern Union Conference, Kenneth Spears, SMC's dean of student affairs; and Charles Fleming Jr., SMC's general manager for finance and development.

The board voted the following academic ranks: Dr. Arno Kutzner, director of admissions and records, to associate professor of education; Dr. Stuart Berkeley, chairman of the education department, to professor of education.

Voted summer service leaves for travel, research and professional improvement were the following: Mrs. Eleanor Jackson, chairman of SMC's art department; Orlo Gilbert, assistant professor of music; and Dr. K. M. Kennedy, professor of education.

Summer study leaves were voted for Robert McCurdy, chairman of the computer science department; Jan Rushing assistant professor of business administration; and Elder Ronald Springett, assistant professor of religion.

College Starts New Enterprise

Collegedale Hydroponics is one of the newest commercial auxiliaries established by Southern Missionary College. The first crop will be tomatoes. At present, this operation consists of one fiberglass building, 42 feet by 120 ft. The contents of the building consist primarily of 48 fiberglass troughs 16 feet long and 30 inches wide which contain sterile pea gravel. Each trough accommodates 36 tomato plants. The gravel serves only as a base to hold the root structure of the plants. About three times a day a liquid nutrient is pumped into the troughs, filling them to the brim. The solution remains in the trough for 30 minutes and then drains back into the tank by gravity. The rest of the day the tomato plants just lie in the sun and grow.

It is anticipated that the plants within this building will produce about 50,000 lbs. of hydroponic tomatoes per year. Ninety-five per cent of the tomatoes are perfect in size and shape. The flavor is unusually good. The skin is nearly as tender and sweet as the inside of the tomato. There is practically no core, and since the tomatoes are grown in an almost sterile atmosphere, there is little harmful bacteria. Because of the conditions in which the tomatoes are grown, they are picked dead ripe and have a shelf life of approximately two weeks without the necessity of refrigeration during this time.

At present, Collegedale Hydroponics is operating as a department of the Village Market inasmuch as it is anticipated that a major portion of the crop will be sold through the Village Market.

Mr. and Mrs. William Burkett attend the tomatoes in SMC's new greenhouse for raising hydroponic produce.

The house in which the tomatoes are grown is heated and air conditioned, and all incoming air is filtered. Because of this filtering process, no pesticides of any type are used on the tomatoes. Many agronomists have been working toward the perfection of the hydroponic tomato for a number of years. The nutrient solution is very complete, containing not only the six major elements necessary for the growth of tomatoes, but also the seven secondary or trace elements which are needed for a quality and tasteful tomato.

The first tomatoes were picked about May 15, and it is the plan to continue picking for four or five months. At the end of that period of time the plants will be taken out, the building will be sterilized, new plants will be placed in the pea gravel, and in about sixty days these plants will be producing tomatoes ready for harvest again.

Adjacent to the large hydroponic house is a 10 by 12 foot mini-garden house, or as some call it a "hobby house." The original manufacturers of this hobby house indicate that it will produce practically all the green vegetables a family of eight or ten desires during the entire winter season. Although plants that grow vertically and cover considerable cubic space, produce the largest volume of produce per square foot of floor space, there are many types of vegetables that can be grown. In this hobby house cucumbers and tomatoes are being harvested now. Also, there is lettuce; and in the process of being planted are green beans, okra, cantaloupe, watermelon, strawberries, and green peppers. It is the plan in the future to prepare for sale on the open market "do-it-yourself kits," including all the materials and equipment for a hobby house. It is also thought that the school might enter into an operation of not only selling the do-it-yourself kits, but also for a consideration erecting the house and planting the first crop within a limited area.

Much of the future of Collegedale Hydroponics is still in the planning stage. Mr. William Burkett, manager of the Village Market, is in charge of the operation and is very optimistic about the future of the industry.

An SDA College Education — Why and How

Much is being said today minimizing the importance and relevancy of a college education. We hear that 80 per cent of the jobs available in the country can be performed by high school graduates, so why spend the time and money to obtain a college education. What you do not hear is that given a choice between a high school or a college graduate to fill the great majority of those jobs, the employer will almost invariably choose the college graduate—not because of a skill gained in college to perform the beginning job better, but because of his broader background that will qualify him for advancement and promotions within the company.

Ellen White stated the need very plainly in Volume 4, page 426: "Cultivated intellect is now needed in the cause of God; for novices cannot do the work acceptably. God has devised our college as an instrumentality for developing workers of whom He will not be ashamed." Ellen White was speaking of old Battle Creek College in this passage. If a college education was deemed necessary ninety years ago, is it less vital for the worker of today?

But some say the cost of a college education today is beyond our reach; we just cannot afford to send our children to our schools. This reaction is becoming rather widespread and is worthy of consideration. Community colleges are inviting to the student and parent for the student may live at home, saving room and board, and the tuition in tax-supported colleges is minimal. The tragic fact is that the army of youth being trained to finish the work of God is not being trained in the state or community tax-supported colleges, but in the church-supported colleges designed for that purpose.

What about cost? Has it become priced beyond the ability of the average Seventh-day Adventist family? What has happened to costs and income in the last thirty years? The auditor of one of our unions in middle America made a very detailed study of these questions and came up with some interesting answers. Here they are:

Tithe per capita between 1940 and 1971 increased 800%.

The median wage for a male employee in the United States (Statistical Abstract) over the same period increased 950%.

The average cost (board, room, tuition) for a college student in 1940 was $405. In 1971 it was $2622—an increase of 650%.

It is evident from the above facts that family income in the last thirty years has increased considerably more than college costs. Also, there are numerous grants and loans available to those students coming from low income and lower middle-income families.

Perhaps the cost of a Seventh-day Adventist college education is not so much a positive factor as a convenient factor to cite for the family not completely sold on the values of Christian education. One of our staff involved in student recruitment told me of experiences he encountered last summer that point up the matter of commitment and dedication. He visited one family living in a $75,000 home. Just as he drove up they were returning from the lake, pulling behind their car a beautiful boat with powerful motor. In his conversation with the parents he found them pleasant and courteous, but firmly convinced that the cost of an Adventist college education for their children was more than they could afford.

In the very same week our recruiter visited another home in the same part of the state—a block house with only two rooms, situated in a rural area. This family had already had two of their children graduate from SMC, and a third is accepted for next year.

As we approach the end of time and the nearness of our Saviour's return, let us seriously count the cost—the cost and the values inherent in a Christian-oriented education for life, here and hereafter.

Accounting and Management Workshop

SMC's Department of Business Administration will offer an Accounting and Management Workshop for Academy Administrators, July 24 - Aug. 4, 1972.

During 1971, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Anderson of Atlanta, Georgia, made funds available to the business administration department to provide business education to a larger area of denominational need.

A study showed that many academy personnel had not had an opportunity to be updated on current accounting practices and management techniques, and that it would be good to offer a workshop with this need in mind.

Those teaching this course will be Wayne VandeVere, Ph.D., C.P.A. and Jan Rushing, M.B.A. and guest lecturers, chosen for their experience and knowledge of the subject presented.

The fees for this course will be $100. One half of this will be covered by the E. A. Anderson Fund, (This includes books and study materials.) The dormitory room will be $20 and board will be approximately $30, making a total of $100. Seventy dollars will be due at registration time and a participant will be expected to pay cash for his meals.

For further details and application blanks, please write to Dr. Wayne VandeVere, Summer Workshop, Collegedale, Tennessee 37315.

News Notes

Dr. J. L. Clark will be a visiting professor at Andrews University this summer, teaching a class in "The Church in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries."

Dr. Everett Dick, author and research professor at Union College and father of SMC's Dr. Don Dick, recently presented the first of the Watrous Lecture Series. This series was made possible by a gift from Dr. M. G. Norrell, '42, of Pell City, Alabama.

The grounds department is contemplating constructing an outdoor classroom in the little woody area behind the science building. When it materializes it will have benches, blackboards, etc.

Friends of Elder Kenneth A. Wright, former president of SMC, will be glad to learn that after two weeks in Florida Hospital he is home again and well on the way to recovery. He was in the hospital to visit a friend when he had a heart arrest.

Jacqueline L. Kinsman, '70, will be teaching psychiatric nursing at Bella Vista Hospital School of Nursing, in Mayaguez, Puerto Rico, during the summer months. She is a member of the staff here at SMC during the winter.
